The benefits impact gap

Employers are investing more than ever before in improving and expanding benefits for their employees. In fact, by 2026, the cost of benefits will have increased by more than 40%*. This is particularly difficult in today's environment where cost containment and expense reduction are major objectives.

At the same time, benefits complexity around choice, providers and experience is outpacing employee engagement and productivity. This creates a gap in the impact your benefits have, and despite increased investment in this area, employees remain dissatisfied with their experience.

Employees are confused and overwhelmed by friction-filled benefits experiences

- Too many providers
- Fragmented data
- Confusing options

Wellbeing and engagement are impacted

>1/3 are fully productive	Only 22% have an excellent experience	Merely 1/3 say there are engaged	52% don't know the benefits offered

Productivity suffers

Faced with disconnected offerings, systems and data, employees are regularly confused and overwhelmed. They find it challenging to navigate benefits and lack the relevant information to access the benefits they really need. This increases stress and impacts their wellbeing, reducing productivity at work.
